Potter and Simonds Win From Pair of Contenders

Eight Matches in Preliminary Play Are Decided in Straight Games; Worcester Puts Up a Hard Fight Against Strebeigh in the First Round

Sixteen scheduled matches in the preliminary round opened the annual Class B National Squash Tennis Association championship tournament on the Yale Club courts yesterday. Although half of the matches were decided by defaults, those that were played brought out stirring and close contests. An unusual feature of the day's play was that not a single match necessitated an extra game. Eighty players, representing nine day in the annual championship singles club, are entered for the title.

The Summary

Few surprises were in order. The most unexpected upset occurred when R. F. Potter, Yale Club, downed Lloyd Richards, Princeton Club, by the decisive count of 15-9, 15-4. This is Potter's first effort in a champion-ship tourney and the victory over his Crimson opponent caused a mild sensation among the spectators.

Geddes Loses Close One Another favorite was toppied when F. M. Simonds, Columbia Club, defeated F. B. Geddes, regarded as the best of the Squash Club's younger players, by a score of 15-13, 15-10.
In both games Geddes put up a determined fight, but unsteadiness at critical moments proved costly.
The contest between Worcester and Strebeigh attracted the largest gallery of the afternoon and the spectators were rewarded with many long rallies.
Strebeigh placed much confidence behind a cross-court game that at times completed baffled his less experienced rival.

New Yorkers Again Beat Philadelphia Racquet Players

The New York Racquet Club scored another victory over the Philadelphia Racquet Club in the final half of their dual series on the local courts yesterday. Only one of the four matches played went to the Quaker side, and was due principally to the splendid playing of C. Roberts, who recently ar-

Old Time Fellow

"Old Time Fellow"-they spoke of him. And it wasn't because his eyes were dim Or his hair was gray or his step was slow They linked his life to the Long Ago; And it wasn't because of his wrinkled face Or the staff he bore through the m Nor the weight of age that had bent him down As he made his way through the busy town.

They called him so-because in the fight He still believed that "the right" was right, Whether it conquered or whether it lost, Whether it failed or it paid the cost; That simple honor and simple truth Were still worth something in man or youth; That worth and station within the fold Should stand for more than a crest of gold.

Because he believed in his simple guile There were other things in life worth while Than the flashy wealth and the flashy fame Of those about him who played the game; Than the stab and blow of friend from friend To gain the way or attain the end-Than the trickery and the savage greed Which stood for the universal creed.

Huggins Plans To Make Call On J. F. Baker

Manager of Yankees Anxious to Assure Himself of Slugger's Services

By W. J. Macbeth

Manager Miller Huggins of the Yankees has decided to put on the gumshoes and hit the highways of the East so that he can round up as speedily as these parts that have so far failed ; respond to the contracts mailed by year. The Miller will probably visit Maryland first, as he is anxious to sound J. Franklin Baker's sentiments toward the game, now that his club has added such a menacing mace as that of Babe Ruth to the well known Murderers' Row.

of Babe Ruth to the well known Murderers' Row.

"I anticipate little trouble," said Huggins upon his arrival in town several days ago. "The office has heard from practically all of the veteran players, and none of them showed the least disposition to be unreasonable. I intend to see the owners of the club as

"As to the youngsters, there is little occasion for worry over them. They are anxious for a trial with a New York club. The addition of Ruth has had a salutary effect upon them. The rockies think Ruth is that pennant factor which we lacked last year, and, of course, all the recruits are anxious for an opening with a team that may be interested in the next world's series money."

Colonel T. L. Huston, of the Yankes, declared yesterday that he was in no manner worried over the possibility of "hold-outs." He said that with one exception there did not appear to be $500 difference between what the club had
